

FILM THRILLS ALL ENGLAND

Sanctioned Cinema Stirs British to Patriotic Enthusiasm.

Other War Movies

By the Photoplay Editor

War and its rumors continue to provide the movie producers with rich material. The cinema year has been replete with features dealing either with the European conflict or some fanciful story of battle and sudden death.

London comes now that "The Battle of the Somme," a five-reel film, has stirred the British to patriotic emotion rarely equaled. David Lloyd George is quoted as saying of it: "If the exhibition of this film does not end war, God help civilization." The production, which is offered as a patriotic effort, has been shown in crowded houses in many parts of the country. In Liverpool, for example, it was tremendous in volume.

Make-believe warfare is represented on this side of the Atlantic in the forthcoming presentation of the late Richard Harding Davis' "Southerners in Hell," which has been brought from the Indian studio and cast out. The scenario was prepared by J. G. Hawkes and Louise Law and Howard Hickman, husband of Jessie Barreca, have costar parts.

Interview #821 with David W. Griffith shows that he is working again in New York disclosure that it was his "last picture"; that "we of the moving picture craft admit our defeat," and that he contemplates turning to the stage in an attempt to find freedom of expression. The foregoing remarkable statements are attributed to Mr. Griffith by Henry Stephen Gordon in the November Photoplay Magazine.

Headed by Vivian Martin, a company of movie players has arrived at the Empire Mine, in Grass Valley, California, and is engaged in shooting some scenes, several of which are being photographed 8900 feet below the sod, for the forthcoming release, "The Right Direction." It's to be a Pallas.

Newspaper stuff seems to be becoming taken with the directors. First it was Fine Arts, with its "The Sun Never Sets." With fine London subplots, a reporter who takes to drink, to be released soon. And now the Kalem Company is out with a statement that George Lurkin, the well-known screen "daredevil," will write murder notes on his cuffs in "Giant Police Reporter," a new one-reel series. Robert Wells Ritchie, manager and author, is sponsor for the script.

Mary MacLaren, Lois Weber's ingenue and star of several "Bluebirds," was loaned to the producers of "Idle Wives," which seems to have made a substantial hit. New York critics are noting her as follows: "Ella Hall is to reappear in pictures with Rupert Julian; Leah Baird, one of the old Vitagraphers, has been engaged, and Ruth Stonehouse will be featured in 'Kinkaid, Gambler,' directed by Raymond Wells.

Since Rosalie Dolly vamped herself into promiscuous onscreen with her impersonation of a dancer in "The Lily and the Rose" there have been loud calls for other devotees of the twinkling toe on the screen. Mauries and Walton have done one for the Famous Players, and Joan Sawyer is going to do another for William Fox. It's a story of gipsy life, directed by Teft Johnson.

A photograph (says the Evening press) of four generations is frequently a possession of a family, but a motion picture of four generations is decidedly uncommon. Such a film was recently snapped at a studio in New Jersey. Washburn and relatives as the stars. Yes, Mr. Washburn is married and has a baby.

The Technical Baedeker

BROAD—"A LADY'S NAME," with Marie Dressler, is a good comedy. It's about a lady novelist who advertises for a husband. Many laughs and much good acting.

EDDIE—"THE FRENCH GIRL," with Crawford, John Charles, Thomas and Margaret Romane. Good singing and good comedy.

GARNICK—"THE HOUSE OF GLASS," with Ethel Grey, John Barrymore and Eddie Sutherland. A good musical comedy, with a sing at circumstantial evidence.

HORN—"SYNTH," with Julia Sanderson, Eddie Cahn and Eddie Sutherland. An import export. The score is prettily done. Good comedy by Cahn.

ADELPHI—"THE GLASS COAT," with Ernest Glendinning and a large cast. A modern morality play that is graced with more human interest than most of the plays on the stage. The acting of Mr. Glendinning is superb.

AT POPULAR PRICES—"LITTLE PEGGY O'MORE," with Marie Dressler, is an American comedy-drama dealing in politics and finance.

KNICKERBOKER—"MADAME SPY," with Herbert Chilton. A play of international complications by Lee Morrison and Harry Clay Blane.
